Anti Money Laundering in Securities Market Activities Guide

First: Steps of money laundering:

Step one: Placement

In this step cash proceeds of criminal or illegal activity are placed or invested in the financial market.

Step two: Layering

In this step the proceeds of criminal activity are separated from their origins through layers of complex financial transactions.

Step three: Integration

In this step laundered money is integrated in economic activities to make them look legitimate, as if these were ordinary economic activities, to the point where it becomes difficult to distinguish between it and money from legitimate sources.

Second: Cases that give rise to suspicion of money laundering

- 1. A client who shows extraordinary interest in the degree of compliance of parties subject to Anti Money Laundering Instructions in financial market operations, with the requirements to report suspicious activities.
- 2. A client who refuses to give any information related to his activities or the source of his money.
- 3. A client who is accompanied by another person who directs the client and answers all the questions and inquiries posed by the employee.
- 4. A client who has difficulty describing the nature of his activity or who lacks general information related to that activity.
- 5. A client who gives information identifying the source of his money, which turns out to be erroneous or misleading.
- 6. A client who trades in large sums of money without having the most basic knowledge of the nature and risks of investment in securities.
- 7. A client who has many accounts or who has power of attorney over several accounts in the company, and who does not trade in these accounts.
- 8. The client who deposits regularly and repeatedly a sum of money less that JD 10,000 by a small amount to avoid being subject to due diligence procedures provided for in the Anti Money Laundering Instructions.
- 9. Deposits in the client's account of large and unjustified sums through money orders.
- 10. A client whose account statement shows large unjustified deposits related to cash or cheques whose totals are usually equal.
- 11. A client who deposits a sum of money, and shortly afterwards transfers the sum to a third party or to another company without a justification related to his/ her work.
- 12. A client who deposits a sum in cash to buy securities as a long-term investment, then shortly afterwards instructs the broker to sell and withdraws the money.

- 13. A client who feeds his/ her account constantly and does not do any trading or does very little trading, then he/ she withdraws the money.
- 14. If a client requests transfers, without justification, between his accounts and those of others who authorize him to trade on their behalf.
- 15. A client in a country that does not have anti money laundering legislation or legislation against terrorism financing.
- 16. A client who deposits large sums in his account and asks to buy securities without care to profit or loss, then sells and withdraws the money.
- 17. A client who does not show interest regarding risks, value of commissions, or other costs of trading.

Third: Behavior of employees of parties subject to the provisions of the Anti Money Laundering Law

Modes of behavior described below by employees of parties subject to the provisions of the Anti Money Laundering Law constitute grounds for suspicion of money laundering activity:

- 1. A sudden and noticeable rise in the standard of living and expenditure of the employee that is not compatible with his/ her monthly salary.
- 2. If the employee helps execute operations through which the name of the end beneficiary or the counterpart is concealed.
- 3. If the employee repeatedly bypasses oversight procedures and pursues a policy of prevarication in performing his work.
- 4. If the employee gives priority to executing the instructions of certain clients.
- 5. If the employee exaggerates the credibility, morality, ability, and sources of the client in his reports to the management.
- 6. If the employee avoids taking any holidays.
